- Strengthening US dollar against world currencies and weaker commodity prices (i.e. oil) keep downward pressure on the Canadian dollar
- Generally as the Canadian dollar rises, the basis will weaken and as the Canadian dollar falls, the basis will strengthen.

Special Notes

- The basis reported in the Tuesday – Closing Market Price Table on slide #2 is the local basis for the markets being used. It is impacted by the value of the Canadian dollar, transportation, local supply and demand, etc.
- The adjusted basis (U.S. Basis) removes the effect of the Canadian dollar changes with the resulting number showing the trend of all the other items impacting basis (i.e. transportation, supply, demand, etc.). The adjusted basis provides a good yearly basis comparison
- For the numerical data shown for the futures (slides 3, 4 and 5) and the current week in the table on slide #2, a blue number indicates it is up, a red number indicates it is down, and a black number indicates it is the same as the previous Tuesday's number
